The Star of Bethlehem, the planet's namesake, is seen rising in the east early in the morning. Then again, the nearby star system of Beta Centauri, known as "The Beehive," may be more readily identified as "The Beehive of the Summer Triangle," the group of three stars that includes Vega, Castor and Pollux. Charts show that the birth of the universe occurred somewhere near 13.7 billion years ago. The universe has been expanding ever since, driven by the energy released in the big bang that created our present day cosmos. About 12 billion years after the big bang, the universe was undergoing a period of expansion known as inflation, caused by the energy released by the many new universes spontaneously formed during the big bang. This explosive event, called the "inflaton" period, lasted for approximately a trillionth of a trillionth of a trillionth of a second. After inflation was completed, the universe was getting ready to undergo a second phase of expansion known as "dark energy," a new force in the cosmos that dominates the universe at this time.
